75 Years Of Progress
The President and Trustees of Ithaca College cordially invite you to be their guest at a Convocation Commemorating the 75th Anniversary of the Founding of Ithaca College at 2:30 p.m. Friday, October 6, 1967 Ithaca, New York

Lord C. P. Snow:
"... I am firmly of the opinion that the world cannot afford not to do its best for those who are going to add something specific to human creativity."

Convocation Address 1967
75th Anniversary theme:

"Personal Fulfillment In A Creative Environment"

... We must realize that, with patience, we will grow into this campus we have created.

This task could be difficult, its solution not easily found. But, it must be done, our hopes on this day are that all of us in the Ithaca College family can join together with an attitude of Understanding, Tolerance, and Compromise so that United we can add a new dimension to education within an atmosphere unique from other campuses. Granted, each of us have our own individual responsibilities, but only by working together, open mindedly, will we bring a new dimension of acclaim to Ithaca College.

So to conclude, we once again congratulate those responsible for the first 75 years. But also, as a representative of the student body, I express our readiness and our plea for change and growth in the next 75 years. We are optimistic in this plea because what we’ve seen happen to this campus since we’ve been here, is proof enough of the potential of this institution.

... Peter Burrill

We should prefer to believe that demonstrations at Berkeley and elsewhere are the exception, &rnerated by some small number of disgruntled and neurotic leaders. But we could—and I think with greater justice—construe such incidents as distant rumblings portending the shape of things to come. I regard it as not only possible but indeed probable that a new and revolutionary breed of students is appearing on our campuses. For quite some time to come, we may expect the riots in our cities during the long hot summers to be followed by disturbances in our colleges and universities during the academic year—perhaps as a substitute for the traditional rites of spring. We have complacently reassured one another that education is not a democratic process, that we, the haves, graciously give of our wisdom to the have-nots—forgetting that every extension of political democracy has been similarly challenged by the dogma that mankind inherently divides into the few who govern and the many who obey. I suspect that the student is about to come into his own on the American campus, as a contributing member of the academic community, as a responsible voice in the determination of institutional policy.

The Cayugan of 1968 is an especially important document for Ithaca College. While copies of all Cayugans are kept on file, those published on significant anniversaries are cherished with particular care. When it comes time for the College to observe its first century of service, this yearbook undoubtedly will be the first reference consulted to determine how the campus looked—and what took place—during the 75th Anniversary Year.

As a basis for this message, I have been looking through the 50th Anniversary Cayugan, published in 1943. It is a much more modest book and, in terms of present day ideas about design, layout and typography, some might consider it corny. It is quite likely that the creative spirit which has gone into this publication likewise may be regarded as outdated by the reader twenty-five years hence.

But college yearbooks record more than passing styles and fads. I note, for example, that the Cayugan of 1943 was comprised of 110 smaller pages containing the photos of 111 seniors and the 54 members of the faculty and administrative staff.

Student groups in 1943 were photographed against backgrounds of downtown buildings which have entirely disappeared. I hope that this will not be the case with many of the backgrounds which have been chosen so imaginatively for the group photos of 1968.

And I know that book will demonstrate for those who might read it on our 100th Anniversary that the spirit of Ithaca College was progressive and youthful at seventy-five.

“Ithaca College has the opportunity to write the educational success story of the century. For a private college to construct a new campus and develop a strong liberal arts program within a relatively few years is a noteworthy achievement. However, this is not a great achievement unless the purpose of these changes are fully appreciated. The purpose must be to give the individual student a better opportunity to develop his academic and professional interests.

Ithaca College was a good college before it moved to its present setting. The teachers during the Woolworth era of the College’s history were good ones. Their students were motivated and accomplished much in their specialized areas. With improved academic and professional settings, we can expect more of the Ithaca College graduate. The true accomplishments of Ithaca College can only be reflected in the personal accomplishments of its alumni.”

Dr. T. Walter Carlin

“Personal Fulfillment in a Creative Environment”
“75 years of existence and a new 35 million dollar campus”

It seems we already have enough credibility gaps in our society. The 75th Anniversary slogan is not meant to be read and understood, it is a bit of mass media, something out of focus that nobody really reads but rather sees like “Government Inspected Meat”. We know that a great amount of meat is not inspected . . . .

"Personal fulfillment in a creative environment"—the theme of the 75th Anniversary Year—expresses the thought that we should ever seek to maintain and strengthen the quality of our College life so that it will provide the best possible conditions and opportunities for the full development of the intellectual, moral, social, and physical potentialities of every student.

The physical plant, which is among the best in the nation, is only part of the total environment that we are building. Inspired and highly competent teaching, modern curricula, effective counseling, varied professional artistic, and social activities—these too are important parts of our creative life.

The creative environment has largely become a reality as we celebrate our 75th Anniversary. May our students avail themselves in an imaginative and judicious fashion of what we have to offer to the end that they move toward that degree of personal fulfillment that is possible in their college years.

Dr. R. H. Kaaret
"Can a professor of literature help students to become creative individuals? This seems a simple enough question to address to those who have dedicated their lives to teaching literature, but it is a question that defies a simple answer. Neither Sophocles nor Dante nor Joyce wrote with any concern for the individuality of the students who turn expectant faces towards the instructors of Ithaca College. How then are we to adapt the works of such men of genius to the varied, and often conflicting, creative needs of our students? Emerson could exhort students of the nineteenth century to read for "lustres", that is, to read for what was true for them, but students whose sensibility has been shaped by a world in which all is subject to doubt can no longer respond to that Emersonian iron string. "Trust thyself." As virtually every major writer since Ibsen reveals, the agonizing cry of individuals in the modern world is for help in discovering the way to create the true self.

Many instructors, aware of the complexity and mystery of the individual psyche, assert that a student's individuality and creativity must remain a secret between him and his God—if he is to develop any individuality at all. Although Hardy and Hopkins and Stevens may present bewilderingly different insights into the nature of man and his place in the order of things, no instructor should attempt to pass judgment on such discrepancies. To impose one's own preferences or scheme of values upon students is not only to be intolerant and arrogant but also to frustrate a fundamental purpose of a liberal education: the development of a catholic taste. This noncommittal attitude common among many English professors seems an inadequate response to the intense need of students for enlightenment, and it has been condemned by Lionel Trilling as an abandonment of the moral responsibility of teachers of literature. Yet equally reprehensible is the professor brash enough to offer a course in himself. Nothing is more ironic in an educational institution than to observe our students emerging from a class in Shakespeare or Tolstoy and echoing one uniform opinion on a subject that will continue to be debated as long as men continue to think for themselves.

Is it inevitable, then, that literature professors remain aloof from the creative individuality of their students, or else shape these students into their own image? Such a question poses two extreme alternatives, and the following suggestions are offered in hope that it is possible to create a student-teacher relationship that will avoid both of these evils:

1. Each week students should meet by themselves to discuss an assignment before the instructor has told them what to think.
2. After such meetings students will receive copies of the instructor's views on the week's assignment, views that he would normally deliver in his lectures.
3. Later each week students will meet with the instructor to discuss the week's assignment from any point of view that they select.
4. Students will have the option of enrolling in classes in which the instructor does not assign any grades to examinations or papers, but only makes comments. At the end of the semester a comprehensive examination will be administered and graded by other members of the department.

Thus, instructors will be forcibly reminded that the purpose of their association with students is not to assign grades, not to pass on their knowledge, not even to endow students with their wisdom. The purpose of a teacher of literature is to help each student to discover what significance a work of literature holds for him, not for someone else. Only thus can the study of literature prove to be an experience through which a student continually creates his own individuality."

E. W. Terwilliger
"The conditions for personal fulfillment in the postgraduate business life are not far different from those conditions that pertain to an academic atmosphere. There is the goal of achievement and success, of attainment of status and acceptance by one's fellow man. There exists the opportunity of contribution to the welfare of one's fellow citizens and the pressures for enlargement tempered by the ethical concepts of benevolent behavior and morality. In both areas there exists the omnipresence of a central authority to temper individualistic behavior and sometimes rationally, or irrationally, to regulate personal behavior and motivation.

The drive for personal fulfillment in an academic atmosphere is therefore a "dry run" for the same drive that will occur in the years of maturity that follow. It is important for the student to make the dry run count and prepare him for the postgraduate world."

Bernard P. Birnbaum
“Every student’s main objective must be his intellectual development. However, physical accomplishments in many cases constitute an integral part of a student’s aims and desires. Personal fulfillment through athletics requires discipline of an individual not usually found in the classroom, and each discipline contributes to a man’s over-all education. Three of these factors are leadership, courage and teamwork. Only if each of these are successfully accomplished, can competence be attained in athletics. There is no easy way to play a team game and there cannot be short-cuts to success. When an individual or a team recognizes and establishes these requirements, they have made a great advance towards personal fulfillment in athletics.”

"At Ithaca College we are trying to achieve personal fulfillment by providing an academic atmosphere which will enhance the understanding of each individual student.

Man's obligations, whether he lives in a large or a small city or in a college campus, are primarily to himself. The fulfillment of his personality depends on the creativity of his environment. There can not be major fulfillment of the individual, nor can there be any meaningful personal creativity without the understanding of the self. A creative environment, to be sure, contributes immensely to one's own understanding.

A man who wants to have a garden should plant his own flowers. The plants will not bear flowers until they are deeply rooted.

Man stands alone. Every time he spits he spits out his own soul."

"Personal fulfillment in a creative environment is the local equivalent of \textit{mens sana in corpore sano} or otherwise \textit{ars longa, vita brevis}. For the alert student the implication is urgent and real: get what you can get while you can get it. The physical environment at Ithaca College is as creative as modern architecture can make it; the personal fulfillment, however, remains the responsibility and the opportunity of each student. If you do not find here the highest degree of personal fulfillment, intellectual and otherwise, it is not the fault of the environment, but rather that of one's self. All things do not come to those who only stand and wait."

"I do not believe that here at Ithaca College one achieves at this stage of his life personal fulfillment; rather one develops concepts which may lead to that fulfillment in later life. To me, therefore, the anniversary theme means encouraging students so that their chief concern is in "making a life," not in making a living, although of course "making a life" involves making a living. Through good teaching and example one hopes to encourage his students to develop a philosophy of life which should mean cultivation of their higher nature, do God's will and render service to their fellow man, contribute their mite toward making this world a better place in which to live. One also hopes to encourage them to believe thoroughly in the philosophy of Horace Mann as expressed by him in these words, "Be ashamed to die until you have won some victory for humanity."

"Ithaca College affords an opportunity for me to teach and do my research in an atmosphere almost totally free of artificial pressures and external interference. This personal and professional freedom and especially in a setting of such natural and man-made beauty leads to an environment in which whatever creative spark I have is nurtured. It is indeed through my creative work, both in my research and teaching, that I find personal fulfillment."

Robert Pasternack
“From my experience as a clinical psychologist I have concluded that it is an absolute necessity for psychological well being or mental health that we be deeply involved in some type of meaningful activity that allows us to make use of our skills and abilities. In our society the possession of a college degree increases greatly the likelihood of finding this kind of involvement the rest of our lives. I see the college environment as a place in which students can begin the process of finding meaningful involvements at the same time that they are more fully developing their skills and abilities—a place to develop their sense of competency.”

"Ithaca College is called a liberal arts college primarily because those of us on the faculty and in the administration are supposed to enable our students to liberate themselves from the grossly prejudiced and grossly oversimplified explanation of things inflicted upon most of them during their first seventeen years. Thus, to the extent that we view our principal function as that of knocking the rough edges off our students so that they will fit well into some organizational mold, we surely are not providing a "creative" or any other kind of environment which can begin to encourage growth toward new and broader understandings of self and the world."

Charles Sackrey

“Personal fulfillment is an academic atmosphere”: or the care and feeding of the intellect in those hot-houses known as colleges and universities.

It is a strange and wonderful fact about a college education that it may produce and equip with a baccalaureate degree an individual prepared for a lifetime of appreciating the beauties of a football game (I am not picking on football, since it is only one example of many kinds of games involving human bodies, voices, etc.), yet one so ill-equipped to receive pleasure from ‘watching’ an intellectual game that he would not recognize an idea if it hit him between the (mind’s) ‘eyes’. I shall not here debate the issue of what the function (or functions) of a college or university might be, since I see no end to this debate, but shall remark only upon the oddity of the fact to which I have just referred. A college education means many things to many people, of course, and undoubtedly it is a good thing that it may equip a person to receive pleasure from and to appreciate the beauty of a great many things, but I should think it distinctly odd if such an education failed to develop the capacities of a number of individuals for appreciating the beauty of an abstract argument, in whatever subject matter it might appear, and for receiving definite pleasure from ‘watching’ the performances of the better minds.

The human being who is capable of becoming an appreciator of the games involving human bodies, voices, etc., is not rare at all; the human being capable of becoming a performer in such games is somewhat rare; but the individual capable of becoming an appreciator of an abstract game is rarer still, and the rarest of all is of course the individual capable of performing in this game. For a college to be capable of acquiring, nourishing, and producing people of the first two sorts is relatively easy, but for it to fail in the case of the latter two sorts would be just as odd as the greenhouse operator who seems able to produce and nourish only those plants that are capable of surviving outside the greenhouse, and has only dead, stunted, or poor specimens of the genuine hothouse plant to show us. The intellectual, whether student or faculty member, is a hothouse plant, and requires many years in an atmosphere sensitive to his needs for his development and maturation. (But unlike the plant, he can find his way to another hothouse if he observes too many of his fellows in various stages of arrested growth or even death). The greenhouse operator may survive in the business world, as may the college, but we shall look upon each as a rather poor example of its kind. The position of Ithaca College in its seventy-fifth year is obviously not what it is to be hoped it will be in the future; its position is rather like that of the greenhouse operator who has just been supplied with the latest hothouse and equipment, but who has as yet not acquired, nourished, and produced very many of the rarer species, the appreciators (students) and the performers (faculty) of the intellectual games to which I have made reference.
"Today's university or college is much more reflective of the world around us than we care to admit. Even a relatively small college such as Ithaca cannot escape functioning as a large corporation—the bureaucratic process (accounting procedures, etc.) inexorably intertwines and controls the direction, attitude and policy of the school. We, ourselves, make a mistake in assuming that the intellectual community is immune to modern bureaucratic diseases. But size itself only allows so much freedom for the individual and Ithaca College has size—especially in dollar volume.

Neither the student nor the professor should, I think, expect the college to be, therefore, the nutrient of personal freedom and fulfillment. What fulfillment he can achieve will be limited unless his ideas and ideals fall in line with the "college-corporate" thinking. It is easy then and is known also by the name—security.

Otherwise, fulfillment can only be measured in terms of the tenacity with which inner ideals are pursued and held to. I don't think that society (including the academic one) has changed too much in its distrust and discouragement of the true individualist. Only the form of punishment is different."

"All that each person is, and experiences, in body and in mind, all these things are different expressions of himself and of one root and are identical; and not one of these things nor one of these persons is ever quite to be duplicated, nor replaced, nor has it ever quite had precedent; but each is a new and incommunicably tender life, wounded in every breath, and almost as hardly killed as easily wounded; sustaining for a while without defense the enormous assaults of the universe."

The editors and staff of the 1968 Cayugan wish to thank
Mr. David Talbot, our advisor, and those members of the faculty and administration who have co-operated in the production of this yearbook. Our special thanks go to Mr.
Tony Bruculere of American Yearbook for his time, talent, and patience.
Message from the editors . . . "There's been a mistake!"
