WICB-TV Special Broadcast Airs Views of CORE and Black Muslims

by Tony Nacinovich

On Wednesday March 7, WICB-TV aired a special broadcast which consisted of a presentation of views by James Farmer, National Director of the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE) and Malcolm X, minister of Mosque #7 in New York City, a leader of the Black Muslims. Since CORE is a fairly well known organization, the greater portion of the discussion was devoted to the views of the Black Muslims.

The Black Muslims is a group that advocates complete separation of the Negroes and the whites rather than the integration program suggested by CORE. The Black Muslims are members of a cult based upon the Islamic faith. They totally accept the teachings of the honorable Elijah Muhammed, their twentieth century prophet. According to Mr. X, Elijah Muhammed has received the blessings of Allah and has been able to spread the Islamic faith to the American Negro.

It is the belief of Mr. X that the Negro was deprived of the Islamic faith because of their forced slavery under the whites. In breaking his bonds to the American tradition, a Negro, joining the Black Muslims, adopts the last name of X to sever himself from his American past.

Mr. X states in essence that our government makes hypocrites out of the American people because of the forced brotherhood laws. The Black Muslims feel that Negroes should live together in their own community and should not be forced to live with the whites. This separation, Mr. X explains, can only be accomplished by providing the Negroes with a state or states within the United States where they might live harmoniously. If this could not be done, the alternative offered by the Black Muslims is a U. S. financed transportation of all Negroes to an area in Africa which would be purchased by the United States. This transplantation would be considered an attempt at payment for the harsh treatment which the Negro has received in the United States. The main emphasis is placed on the acquisition of southern states from which the whites would be removed.

Mr. X states that the Black Muslims are taught to obey all laws and law agencies. He also made clear the fact that if in trying to avoid trouble, they were confronted with aggressive action, the Black Muslims would do whatever necessary to protect themselves. Mr. X failed to specify how the objectives of the Black Muslims could be obtained without garnering conflict with existing laws and law agencies.

In contrast to the above statement concerning the observance of jurisprudence, Mr. X expounded that it is the belief of the honorable Elijah Muhammed, and thus the will of Allah, that the Black Muslims will be at war with the whites before 1970 in the battle of Armageddon. By that year, the Black Muslims will have emerged victorious.

In summation of his anti-integration views, Mr. X concluded with this statement. "We feel that God and devil will clash and we want to be on God's side. That is why we want to separate from the wrong side and not integrate."

I. C. Wrestlers Place Second In Intercollegiate Tourney

by John Cassese

Although only three wrestlers represented Ithaca College, excellent showings by all of them enabled Ithaca to gain second place out of over fifty teams represented in the 25th annual Interstate Intercollegiate wrestling tournament at Case Tech in Cleveland, last Friday and Saturday.

Orlando Iacovelli, 147 pound sophomore from Ithaca who finished the dual meet season with an excellent 8-0 record, defeated some of the outstanding middleweights in the country as he copped the Bombers only individual title. Included among his four victims were Bob Reilly of Toledo, who had climaxed an undefeated season by winning the Mid-American Conference title the week before, James Mahan of Cincinnati, whom Londo pinned in the semi finals in 5:05, and Duane Whittaker, highly ranked Cortland star, who dropped an 8-6 decision to the championship bout. An ironical note is that Iacovelli was ceded no better than eighth in the pre-tourney ratings by the coaches.

Orlando Iacovelli

Blase Iuliano, sophomore from Scotia, was forced to default to defending champion Ed Rutkowski of Notre Dame in the 191 pound final when he suffered a shoulder dislocation in the first minute of action. It was tough luck for Blase who had easily defeated his preliminary round opponents and whom many considered was more than an even match for the top ceded Rutkowski. In his semi final match, Iuliano easily clobbered second-ceded Larry Schiacchitano, a two-time Metropolitan Intercollegiate champ from Montclair State College in New Jersey, 7-0, and Friday night effortlessly defeated the Lake Erie A.A.U. champ by a score of 10-2.

Blase Iuliano

Lou Ricks, a sophomore from Great Neck, Long Island, ran into a little tough luck, but still managed to capture a fourth place in what was considered one of the toughest weight classes, 115 pounds. Wrestling well until he reached the quarter final round, Lou met the eventual champion, Dave Butler of Western Michigan and held the edge on him until the third period when he was caught in a reverse cradle and pinned. After pinning New York State champion Ray Bouchard of Albany State, who owned a perfect 9-0 dual meet record in the consolation semi-finals, Ricks met top-ceded defending champion Dick Martin of Notre Dame in the consolation finals, and dropped a narrow 4-3 decision. Ricks was leading 3-1 at the beginning of the third period when he developed stomach trouble, which reduced his effectiveness considerably.

Coach Herb Broadwell was generally pleased with his boy's showing, but felt they could have done even better. Toledo, the champion team, was represented by a full squad of boys which probably ac-

United Fund Honors Ithaca College For Annual Assistance

Ithaca College was honored at the fifth annual meeting of the Tompkins County United Fund for its support in the past six campaigns. By the end of this year, the college will have contributed nearly $12,000 through the faculty, employee, and other contributions.

The United Fund expressed thanks to the following faculty members for their help in campaigns: Mrs. Carl Vail, the first chairman of the USO junior hostess group; Mrs. Anne Blodgett, who drove entertainers to Sampson in all kinds of weather for five years; Dean Earl Clarke, a long-time member of the USO committee; Mr. Bill Grimshaw, who was responsible Wanted - Responsibility To Fill The Vacuum!

Once again The Ithacan feels the need to clarify a situation and attempt to synthesize student opinion.

The Union Lounge has become the playground of sheer negligence. Chairs, couches, tables and floor are being destroyed piece by piece through the efforts of a certain minority of individuals. These students are clearly taking advantage of the majority of the student body when they use the "Heart" of campus life for recklessness and horseplay. Their activities will result in Student Government decisions which will be extreme in nature and affect the majority more than the few guilty individuals.

A Student Government policing body and the closing of the lounge are the first two steps which will be taken unless student opinion reaches such fervor as to correct the present situation of vandalism. These actions will arouse murmurs of doubt among friends, parents, and guests concerning the behavior of Ithaca College students. Such major actions by Student Government would reflect upon the entire college.

We of "The Ithacan" urge the responsible students of Ithaca College to act on such a proposed action before the measures are considered in vote. How is our Union to be used? What action should we take against vandalism?

The students who speak so clearly for "student rights," must take occasion to rise with equal clarity for "student responsibility."

Student opinion guides Student Government action. You can prevent the closing of the lounge and the use of a "police" body.

Warning!

In previous issues of the "Ithacan" various editorials have been written concerning the petty theft and vandalism occurring in Ithaca and on the I.C. Campus itself. Due to recent continuations of these occurrences the "Ithacan" feels it necessary to again impress upon the students the necessity of reporting any incidents of breakage, intentional or accidental, or theft.

In both the Student Union and in downtown stores continuation of these incidents has made it necessary for the local legislature to begin action on legislation making the punishment more stringent. The penalty for petty larceny is a year in jail, or a fine of $500, or both. Up until recently, even in cases where the evidence pointed to petty larceny, a plea to a misdemeanor has been accepted in many cases. This policy will be discontinued.

A record of a petty larceny conviction precludes any civil service position, service in the armed forces, and usually acts as a strike against the individual in any employer's eyes. Of more immediate concern is that the administration reserves the right to dismiss such students at its discretion.

The seriousness of this entire situation cannot be too strongly impressed on the student body.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor:

During the past few weeks, the Ithacan has presented in its editorial column views pertaining to the misguided students at Ithaca College. The students are accused of being in error and quite wrong in their complacency by students in elected or appointed positions. It is very sad indeed.

Since the beginning of the year, these noble students have cried about the inactive student and the lack of appreciation shown by the students toward their efforts. It reminds me of the little boy who is cuffed by the larger boy next door. He is unable to strike back without promoting another beating, so he cuffs the quiet little girl playing in the sandbox. The same point that can be derived from my small tale can be gotten from the situation here at Ithaca College.

Could it be that our Student Council is out of contact with the Student Body? If the contact did exist, I am sure there would be "action" and less tear-stained editorial columns. Let me suggest that the cry-baby individuals who bewail the sad plight of things stand up and make an honest attempt to reach the students rather than impose this or that on them in the name of some questionable "good." A spark is needed. Is the Council able to provide it or must it go the way of all well-intentioned, sincere failures?

Thank you,
Daniel Canavan, '62

Faculty Speaks

by Mr. Kalamotousakis, Assistant Professor of Economics

This is the first in a series of four articles by Mr. George Kalamotousakis, Assistant Professor of Economics.

The European Common Market And Its Meaning For The U.S.

With the termination of World War II it was expected that a transition from nationalistic to free market was necessary, if not inevitable, so that the interwar experience would not recur.

This outstanding consensus of opinion occurred, of course, as a result of the depression of the 1930's when a sharp decline in the imports of some countries, including the U.S., drastically cut the foreign exchange earnings of other countries. These countries then were unable to pay for their normal volume of imports and had to adopt restrictive imports. In a word, the whole chain reaction tends to completely disrupt trade which, as it will be shown subsequently, is vital for a high level of economic activity for all nations including the U.S.

To avoid these repercussions and, in a sense, to cushion the fluctuations of world trade, i.e., to cushion the liquidity of reserves of all nations, a number of financial and trade institutions were established after 1945. The list includes such names as The International Monetary Fund, The Bank For Reconstruction and Development or World Bank, The European Payment Unions, and GATT, among many others.

All these efforts were converging toward one goal, namely, the effective relations among the national economies of the world via the operations of freely exerted market forces. Three great advantages were expected to follow:

- 1) Free trade on a world scale would lead to greater efficiency everywhere in the use of resources.
- 2) Less developed countries would be helped to develop.
- 3) Non-discriminatory, mutually beneficial expansion of international trade would foster political harmony and understanding.

Unfortunately, what the more optimistic hoped of 1945 has not been fully realized. Obstacles to trade—quotas, exchange controls, tariffs, and others—persist [just read the views of the managers of local industries in the Ithaca Journal to confirm this point to a degree making it impossible to say that the world pattern of production and distribution is primarily governed by free market forces.] In general, the world's resources are not being efficiently used, and in many critical areas the pace of development has been dangerously slow. In view, however, of the limited scope of this article I shall not discuss the reasons for these disappointments, but I will discuss the fact that as a result of these disappointments, the establishment of the European Common Market owes its genesis.

The second article of the series will appear in next week's Ithacan.

Nine Ways To Kill An Organization

1. Don't come to the meeting.

6. If appointed to a committee, don't attend the meetings.
7. If asked by the chairman to give your opinion, say nothing. After
8. Do no more than necessary. When the other members roll up their sleeves to help things along, say the association is run by a clique.

Coed Speaks "The Universal Language" To All IC Dep'ts

by Miriam Jacobs

According to Henry Wadsworth Longfellow "music is the universal language of mankind." Here at Ithaca College it is unfortunate that many students in all the various schools cannot or will not venture out of their departmental activities to socialize and develop culturally with their fellow students through this popular idiom—music. One talented music student who has managed to maintain interests and activities, musical and non-musical, is Wanda Forte.

Miss Forte, a senior who lives in Mamaroneck, N.Y., is currently the president of Sigma Alpha Iota Music Fraternity. Wanda regrets the fact that in the past many music students were unavoidably isolated from their fellow students in other departments because of required rehearsals and practice hours. Wanda feels that "it is important for musicians to promote and further their art to the best of their ability, not only among themselves, but also among other students on campus. An art cannot be isolated, because it is open to the public."

In the past four years, she has done her share to acquaint I.C. students with music by playing in numerous school recitals. She also accompanied the spring musical in her freshman year. Her personal triumph came this year in the form of the annual concerto concert. She was chosen by music faculty judges as one of the soloists who would play with the I.C. Orchestra.

Wanda has studied piano for the past sixteen years; the past four have been under the direction of Prof. Joseph Tague.

Miss Forte has also been active in non-musical activities. In her sophomore year, she served as vice-president of Westminster dormitory and as dorm representative to W.S.G. Later, in her junior year, she held the office of recording-secretary on Student Council.

Before her election as president of S.A.I. for 1961-62, she held the office of secretary-treasurer. As president of S.A.I. one of her main goals is to further American music. The fraternity's annual Greek Sing encourages and invites all fraternities and sororities to compete on a classical level, using American music. S.A.I.'s annual spring recital also features completely American music.

For relaxation, her personal tastes include Brubeck, Nina Simone, Miles Davis, and dancing and bowling.

Upon graduation this June, Miss Forte plans to attend N.Y.U. or Columbia for graduate work; she will major in musicology. She hopes to have a career in music industry or college-level teaching. For Wanda Forte, and thousands of other music students across the county, music is a profession, as well as a personal pleasure.

Controversy

by Frank Schipani

One of the most latent questions of contemporary society is whether or not bilateral disarmament is feasible in any of its possible forms. The primary factor in this discussion is that the Soviet Union is outrightly dedicated to supplanting, by force if necessary, existing governments by a single world communism. Our policy with respect to Russia, China and their satellites is one of containment, i.e., the prevention of any further expansion, and with respect to other countries, in particular those whose independence has been recently acquired, self-determination. To protect the right of various countries to determine their own form of government and to prevent the Soviet Union from forcibly imposing its ideology on other peoples, the United States must have a military capability at least equal to that of the communist bloc. A militantly aggressive foreign policy is so alien to our way of life that a basic change in United States' policy can be discounted.

Big If

Only if the Soviet Union modifies its foreign policy to the extent of non-intervention can disarmament even be considered plausible.

The demands of many well intentioned people are not only on this basis unreasonable, but if either the United States or the Soviet Union were to disarm rapidly, the entire country would be thrown into an economic crisis comparable if not worse than that of the mid 1930's. Over one-third of the national budget is devoted to "Space and Defense". Withdrawing numerous contracts from such major industries as steel and aluminum, and at the same time reducing the armed forces, would throw millions more men on a labor market which is already over supplied.

Deplorable Situation

The situation is unquestionably deplorable—Korea, Laos, Viet Nam—these are symptoms of a troubled world, but to suppose that the problem will be resolved by a reaffirmation of the Monroe doctrine or unilateral disarmament is so fallacious as to be childish. For the present we must wait and watch, intervening only when the situation demands it. It is the contention of the United States that increased world wide education will result in a desire on the part of peoples to have a commanding voice in the nature and policies of their government which, in turn, will result in democracy.

"The Gondoliers"

At "8:15 o'clock" on Wednesday last (March 7th) the Cornell Dramatic Club in conjunction with The Savoyards, opened a run of six performances of the familiar Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, "The Gondoliers".

Under the musical direction of James Sullivan of Ithaca College, the invisible orchestra played a rather tentative overture and then the curtains parted to reveal the chorus of Contadine and Gondolieri singing of their "roses red and roses white" and poling their balky gondolas in a setting designed by Marvin Carlson.

The plot follows the line established by W. S. Gilbert in the earlier operas, with mixed identity and a profusion of wives serving to keep things going nicely. In this opera, the plot is amusingly complicated by making the hero into twins (and only their aged nurse knows which twin is heir to the throne of Barataria!)

A company of enthusiastic principals, under the direction of Harry Grier, performed the play with rather uneven results. David Green as the Grand Inquisitor came closest to the style of acting and singing that makes G & S come to life. The twins, Marco and Guiseppe (Brian Cooper and Timothy Jerome) were glib with the patter assigned to them and Richard Abel, Toni Mergentine and Joan Zajac as the Duke of Plaza-Toro, his wife and daughter, respectively, helped to carry the action forward. As the gondoliers' wives, Barbara Federer and Julie Milligan were attractive with Miss Federer displaying a nice soprano.

ACT TWO presented the company in the sprightly "CACHUCHA" in which group singing and movement were well executed. The quartette and quintette which follow were both musically pleasing. The act closes with the gondoliers again singing at their familiar jobs, the lovers properly re-united and all the sub-plots untangled.

A small but receptive audience seemed to enjoy the work of the company, but more G & S fans might have been added to the roster if the orchestra could have been better prepared and more inventive movement and business provided for chorus and principals alike. These seemingly simple operettas require endless rehearsal to perform them with the exactness which lifts them out of the ordinary . . . this was evidenced last night when every now and then, the indecision cleared and the magic of Gilbert and Sullivan shone through.

Skiers Hampered By Lack Of Snow On College Slope

Hampered by the lack of snow, skiers had little opportunity to make use of Ithaca College's ski slope this past winter.

However, their plans for next year were not thwarted by the absence of snow.

Jim Beebe, President of the Ithaca College Ski Club, said, "The slope has potential and we hope for a better slope next year." He added, "there must be more interest within the student body itself."

Thus far, all work on the run has been done by members of the Ski Club which was organized earlier this winter. The Club set up work parties to clear rocks and spread hay over the slope.

President Dillingham has given the Club free reign in making and carrying out plans. They now have the responsibility of operating the tow and supervising the slope.

Future plans include lighting for the slope and a snack bar on the hill. The fees collected for the use of this facility will be given to the College and used for further improvements. The slope is supervised by a Ski Patrol which is made up from Ski Club members.

It hardly seems that the ski slope will be idle against next year and consensus among the skiers is that the availability of the slope and the organization of skiers will encourage the sport at Ithaca College next year. This year's slope was just a preliminary view into the slopes for the future.

Review

"Look Homeward Angel"

Following the nomenclature of the novel by Thomas Wolfe, the adaption by Ketti Frings presents the story of a few weeks in the life of the Gants, boarding house keepers in Altamont, N.C., in 1916. No doubt much of Wolfe's autobiography had to be omitted but it is not missed for this story of a family of violent feelings and of a moon-struck youth dreaming of the world is complete in what is chronicles.

The play is powerful for several reasons. First, much of the events and sensations constitutes a becoming, in the sense that one stage of life leads to the next. Life runs through the play like a guided stream. At the age of seventeen, Eugene Gant, who is the fictional counterpart of Thomas Wolfe, is wistfully looking ahead to a college education at Chapel Hill and then to the fabulous wonders of a glorious world. The death of Ben Gant, marks the end of Eugene's adolescence and after a losing bout with romance Eugene is finally able to cut himself loose from his mother's boarding house and leaves for Chapel Hill.

As young Eugene, Roger Harkenrider, gives a performance that is sensitive and exciting. His character is called upon to be responsive to the moody transitions of the play and he more than answers the call. He is most impressive in the grief-laden death scene ending the second act.

The acting is admirable but mostly in the major roles. Craig MacNab gives a towering performance of ire and humour and his ability to balance one against the other is amazing. His is, without a doubt, the outstanding performance of the show.

Barbara Campbell, as the mother whose tyrannies and whose love for her children are forbidding and pathetic got off to a slow start and often seemed to be confused. Carol Berman, in her first major dramatic role, portrayed Eugene's romantic ideal. She remained strong throughout and her dainty effervescence was most enchanting.

John McCabe, as the restless older brother full of a kind of rueful wonder and also of affection for Eugene was perfect for the part but had to get through an insecure first act before he could really find himself. Barb Greacen, as Helen Gant, the irritable complaining sister, who keeps the boarding house running and Fred Maderic, as her unemployed spouse, both handled their parts with little trouble.

Most of the Gants' boarders are insipid nonentities and it is probably their extreme contrasts to the explosive personalities of the Gant family that prevents any of the minor characters from standing out. Among the lesser roles, however, John Noble as Dr. Maguire and Audrie Zurel as Mrs. Pert are the most effective. Julie Just, as brothel-boss Madame Elizabeth, delivered her lines convincingly but looked rather like a sweet 18-year old college freshman. —J. Aversa
