It was announced last week that construction on the new South Hill campus site is a step closer to materialization. The Community Facilities Administration in Washington stated that $2,878,000 in low cost loan money has been appropriated to Ithaca College for its use.

President Howard I. Dillignham indicated that the federal funds will be employed in construction of the first stage of the new campus. Scheduled for completion by the fall of 1961 are five dormitories and the student union. Dormitory units are to house 242 men and 250 women undergraduate students.

Design Is Modern

The buildings are contemporary in design, featuring native stone, glass and bronze aluminum. Tullman and Tullman of Ithaca is the architectural firm working on the project.

Negotiations Begin

Negotiations are in the initial stages as the way to obtain funds for construction of the arts and science buildings also scheduled for completion in the Fall of 1966.

Letters To The Editor

My dear Foster Parents:

The snow and ice are all melted away and it is rather warm here these days. How are you getting along today? My dear foster parents? Here in Korea I am just fine and getting along dandy. I won't be long now before the green leaves of trees will come to us again.

During the vacation time I visited some of my relatives in the country and I had a very good time together with them there. Our school gave us the final exams as soon as we returned to school after having winter vacation.

My little brother expects to take an entrance exam for a middle school in March and it means that he has nearly finished his 6 years of primary school course. Now, he is studying very hard for his entrance exam.

How is your school life? Warm spring will be soon here. It is nice to think of warm spring coming soon here. Please stay well and happy, my dear foster parents. In a few country boys and girls are all happy, thank you so much.

Loving yours,

Kim Sun Soo

A Place In The Sun

Returning from vacation to the hectic but sometimes deplorably dull routine of a college campus is often, to say the least, a trying ordeal.

However, the inevitable return to the books must be even more trying for those of us with the spirit of spoolish voyagers, many of which at this time like salmon returning to Capistrano, flock to the sun drenched sandy beaches of beautiful Florida.

Talking with these voyagers, one, if left with the impression that they have indeed found their place in the sun. They seem to endless a citrus, sweet spirit of the joy of life which surely must be a reflection of that wonderful sub-tropical paradiese where men are men, and women are women, and the sun shines freely.

Several days after the most recent vacation, I was standing outside the Annex when I happened to spy someone whom I new had made the trip to Florida during the vacation. I felt a strange sense of inquisitiveness come over me as I stood there and, hoping to get some of his personal impressions of his great voyage, I walked my way to see his face.

"How was it," I asked, trying to conceal my intense interest behind a smile, "how was it a great, fabulous, terrific, wonderful. I mean just great," he said, fairly bursting with childish delight.

"What did you do," I asked, with a growing sense of excitement, "oh, you know. We just kind of made the rounds here and there."
"Oh, I said, my excitement dampened a little by his failure to elaborate. "Well, tell me; how many people stayed?" He looked me straight in the eye, just went all the time. You know and in a very brisk business-like tone of voice said, "Twenty-seven thousand."

"Oh," I said again, I was genuinely impressed. "Where did you stay?" Upon hearing this question, my friend seemed almost literally to be possessed with a kind of devilish good humor. Finally, he spoke, and when he did the words came pouring out in a kind of unorganized torrent. "Who stayed?", he said. "We just went all the time. You know all the spots. And well we did sit at one place for a while but not for long; a cottage a nice place but what a mess it was. But most of the time we just kind of went. And it was really great. And it was cheap too, well not really (Continued on page 4)"
