

Animal Suffering as Evidence Against an Omnipotent God

Presenter: Keigan Case

Faculty Sponsor: Jonathan Peeters

Abstract: This paper addresses the Problem of Evil specifically how it relates to animal suffering. Many theologians have offered replies to this problem but these replies are riddled with flaws and still fail to address the Problem of Evil and animal suffering. There are many things about the nature of evil and the nature of God that seem to be at odds with each other. Examining this problem reveals what we know about the nature of God and explores the possibilities that God's nature could be very different from what we think we understand.