12-5-2005

Concert: Ithaca College Symphony Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra

Ithaca College Symphony Orchestra
Ithaca College Chamber Orchestra
Devin Hughes
Jeffrey D. Grogan

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.ithaca.edu/music_programs

Part of the Music Commons

Recommended Citation
Ithaca College Symphony Orchestra; Ithaca College Chamber Orchestra; Hughes, Devin; and Grogan, Jeffrey D., "Concert: Ithaca College Symphony Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra" (2005). All Concert & Recital Programs. 1522.
http://digitalcommons.ithaca.edu/music_programs/1522

This Program is brought to you for free and open access by the Concert & Recital Programs at Digital Commons @ IC. It has been accepted for inclusion in All Concert & Recital Programs by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ IC.
ITHACA COLLEGE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ITHACA COLLEGE CHAMBER ORCHESTRA

Susan Waterbury, violin
Elizabeth Simkin, cello
Devin Hughes, graduate conductor
Jeffrey D. Grogan, conductor

Ford Hall
Monday, December 5, 2005
8:15 p.m.
PROGRAM

Ithaca College Chamber Orchestra

Overture to Don Giovanni, K. 527
Devin Hughes, graduate conductor

Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart
(1756-1791)

Symphony No. 4 in B-flat Major, Op. 60
Ludwig van Beethoven
(1770-1827)

Adagio-Allegro vivace
Adagio
Allegro vivace
Allegro ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

Ithaca College Symphony Orchestra

Concerto for Violin, Cello and Orchestra in A minor, Op. 102
Susan Waterbury, violin
Elizabeth Simkin, cello

Johannes Brahms
(1883-1897)

Allegro
Andante
Vivace non troppo

Igor Stravinsky
(1882-1971)

The Firebird Suite (1919)

Introduction
The Firebird and its dance
The Firebird's variation
The Princesses' round dance
Infernal dance of King Kashchei
Berceuse
Finale
PROGRAM NOTES

Don Giovanni

While in Prague from January to February in 1787, attending and conducting performances of his most recently completed opera Le Nozze di Figaro and concerts of several of his instrumental works, Mozart received a commission from the Prague impresario Pasquale Bondini for a new opera, which was to be produced in Prague during October 1787. Mozart returned to Vienna and asked Lorenzo Da Ponte, the librettist for Figaro, for another opera libretto. Don Giovanni became the second of three opere buffe Mozart would compose to a libretto by Da Ponte, the third of which, Così fan tutte, Mozart would complete in early 1790. Da Ponte's libretto shows the influence of Bertati's libretto for Gazzaniga's opera Convitato di pietra. The première of Don Giovanni took place to great public and critical acclaim in Prague on October 29, 1787. The Prague reception of Don Giovanni was more positive than that of the opera's first Vienna performances in 1788, for which reviews suggested mild dissatisfaction with the work's extended length and unnecessary plot elaborations (by Jennifer Hambrick).

Symphony No. 4

Robert Schumann described this symphony as "a slender Greek maiden between two Norse giants," and started the long-standing tradition which holds that somehow Beethoven's even-numbered symphonies are less profound than the odd-numbered ones. This may seem true at first glance, but there is much that Schumann's analysis leaves unsaid. While the lambent beauty of the Adagio might suggest the kind of classicism that the Eroica transcended, one should remember that, in many senses, the Fourth, emerging from an intensely foreboding and even tragic introduction, is no less heroic than either the Eroica or the Fifth. Dark-hued and intensely chromatic strivings pull the music from B flat minor toward the unison F which heralds the beginning of the sunny Allegro vivace exposition. While Weber criticized the deliberately sparse-sounding introduction, Tovey sensed its immense stature, writing of the "sky-dome vastness" of its harmonic progression.

The Adagio, a sonata structure minus development, begins with an insistent rhythm which recurs several times. At the start, the violins sing out the sublimely reflective principal motif, a tenderly lyrical utterance which stands in direct contrast to the opening figure. These two contrasting elements are always at the hub of the movement, the expressive violin theme later becoming the subject of variations. The reprise of the second group then leads to the highly atmospheric coda. What follows is the Scherzo; a bucolic main theme suggests the rustic folk-dance idioms that Beethoven knew well; nevertheless, the movement surpasses the Eroica's Scherzo in power and dynamism. It should be noted that this is the first of Beethoven's symphonic scherzos to feature a repeat of the trio section, which is significant, given the massive nature of the surrounding material. The scherzo is heard one last time, now abridged, before the shattering final coda with its three-bar horn solo. Expanded scherzos also figure in several of Beethoven's later symphonies (the exception is the Eighth), and sketches suggest the technique was originally envisaged for the Fifth. Opening with a series of mercurial sixteenth note fragments from which the first subject group is derived, the final movement is "perpetuum mobile." As the movement unfolds, the oboe's second theme provides contrast with the initial statement, the relentless development section posing serious technical challenges to the lower instruments: bassoon, cellos and basses. In the coda, surely one of Beethoven's most humorous inventions, the theme is passed around at half speed after a "false" ending has been reached, and finally brushed aside dramatically as cellos and basses plummet down the scale before the striking final bars for full orchestra.

Notes by Michael Jameson

Double Concerto

Brahms wrote this work during the summer of 1887, and conducted the premiere himself on October 18 in Cologne, with Joseph Joachim and Robert Hausmann as, respectively, the violin and cello soloists. Brahms had just turned 20 when he met Joseph Joachim (1831-1907), already a celebrated violinist at 22 and destined to be acclaimed also as a composer, conductor, and educator. It was Joachim who commended his new friend to Robert and Clara Schumann, thereby assuring his celebrity. For 30 years the two were fast friends despite the distance usually separating their power bases: Joachim's in Berlin, Brahms' in Vienna finally. "Jussuf," however, had a weakness -- obsessive jealousy of his wife Amalie, whom he accused of adultery in 1881 with his (and Brahms' and Dvorák's) publisher, Fritz Simrock. Brahms disbelieved, and said so in a consolatory letter to Frau Joachim. During divorce hearings she produced this letter in court, and the judge agreed publicly with its contents.

As a result, Joachim cut off communications with Brahms for six years, although he continued to play the composer's music. Finally, seeking to repair the damage, Brahms composed the "Double" Concerto as a peace offering; the effort was successful, although their camaraderie of former years was never fully restored. In addition to composing the "Thun" sonatas of 1886 for violin and cello, Brahms had been studying Baroque concerti grossi, so the sound of string instruments was in his ear. This concerto would be his last orchestral work.

From the Swiss vacation resort of Hofstetter on Lake Thun, he wrote to several persons about his "strange flight of fancy...for fiddle and cello." But first he sent a postcard to Joachim, received on July 19, 1887, by which time Brahms had completed the work and was copying solo parts. When Joachim responded enthusiastically by return mail, Brahms asked him to arrange a play-through with Robert Hausmann, who had introduced the Op. 99 Cello Sonata a few months prior; Brahms himself would accompany on the piano. This took place at Clara Schumann's home in Baden-Baden in September (her diary notes that "Brahms and Joachim have spoken to one another again after years of silence"). Although neither the Cologne premiere nor the first Vienna performance was a success, the concerto finally entered the repertoire, even if it never enjoyed the success of his violin concerto or the two for piano.

The opening Allegro (A minor; 4/4) begins with the kernel of the main theme, then a cello "recitative," and finally the kernel of a more lyrical second theme. Next, the violin has a turn, though the cello intrudes after five bars, following which the orchestra finally gets to play a 44-bar exposition of themes already previewed. Soloists perform the traditional second exposition, but there is not, in the development or recapitulation, a lot of unison playing. Throughout, the soloists are not stars with a supporting cast, but merely leading characters in a primarily orchestral drama. Unison passages appear in the A and A' sections of the sweetly autumnal, folk-flavored, song-form Andante in D major (3/4 time). The solo instruments dovetail or briefly overlap in an F major middle section, until a magical enharmonic transition leads back to unison playing.

The lighthearted but "not too lively" rondo (vivace non troppo) has repeating A sections with a staccato-marcatuto rhythm that wrong-headed playing can accelerate and by so doing adulterate. The B section is broader, with chords on the cello that the violin echoes. The C section, in F major, is similarly broad but longer, before the A material returns one more time, with a jaunty tilt of the cap and a kind of jig -- all the more entertaining in light of Brahms' short stature, bushy beard and, by then, Santa-like corpulence (by Roger Dettmer).

The Firebird

Stravinsky composed The Firebird (L'Oiseau de feu) in 1909 - 1910 for the Ballets Russes, which introduced it at Paris on June 25, 1910. Sergey Diaghilev, founder and guiding genius of the Ballets Russes, which took Paris by storm in 1909, remained a catalytic force until his death 20 years later. The scion of St. Petersburg gentry, he recruited dancer-choreographer Mikhail Fokine to "liberate" Russian ballet from inherited French conventions and purely decorative dancing. Later on, by sponsoring other, younger choreographers, and by commissioning cutting-edge composers, painters, and scenarists, he revolutionized the ballet worldwide. After the first Paris season, Diaghilev asked for a new work based on the fable of a fiery bird and a wicked sorcerer. Since Rimsky-Korsakov, his first choice of composer, had recently died, he commissioned a pupil, Anatol Lyadov. The latter, gifted but dilatory, had only purchased music paper by deadline. Thus, the score was assigned to another, younger Rimsky pupil, whose Scherzo Fantastique and Fireworks Diaghilev had heard at a St. Petersburg concert. If Igor Stravinsky at 27 had been slow to develop, he was ready for Destiny's kiss.

In November 1909, to a scenario by Fokine, he began composing the work that premiered in June 1910 with glittering success. Aleksandr Golovin designed scenery, Leonid Bakst the costumes. Gabriel Pierné conducted a huge orchestra with quadrupled winds et al. When the storied Anna Pavlova couldn't master Stravinsky's intricate rhythms, Tamara Karsavina replaced her in the title role. Fokine himself danced Prince Ivan, who captures the Firebird while hunting in the garden of evil sorcerer Katschei. When he frees her, she gives him a magic feather, whereupon 13 princesses appear, prisoners of the sorcerer. Ivan falls in love with the prettiest, who begs him to leave -- Katschei literally petrifies any who trespass. When the latter materializes (an sff blast by the full orchestra), Ivan uses the feather to summon Firebird. She dances the sorcerer and his retinue to sleep, enabling Ivan to destroy them, break the spell, and claim his princess.

Stravinsky extracted three concert suites. The first one used original orchestration and ended with Katschei's "Infernal Dance." A second one, in 1919, created in Switzerland for conductor Ernest Ansermet, for standard-size orchestra -- still the most popular -- has the "Infernal Dance" midway, followed by "Lullaby" and the original finale. In 1946, Stravinsky fashioned a third suite with additional materials from the ballet, to renew his copyright, but it never caught on.

The 1919 suite begins with the Firebird's capture. "Khorovod" follows -- a round-dance by the princesses -- then Katschei's arrival and wild dance. Firebird's seduction of him in "Berceuse" sets up the sonorous, pageant-like final tableau.
ITHACA COLLEGE CHAMBER ORCHESTRA
Jeffrey D. Grogan, conductor

Violin I
Megan Atchley
Natasha Colkett
Daniel Demetriou, concertmaster
Brenna Gillette
Christopher Jones
Jeannine McGreevy
Mary Raschella
Elizabeth Stein

Violin II
Timothy Ball
Kate Goldstein
Joshua Modney
Maev O'Hara
Colin Oettle
Shawn Riley
Lauren Sciavalino
Christian Simmelink*

Viola
Lauren Buono
Shanan Glandz
Hannah Petersen*
Annabelle Terbetski

Cello
Sam Boase-Miller
Jennifer Chieffalo
Alana Chown
Elizabeth Meszaros*

Bass
Xander Lott
Patrick O'Connell*

Flute
Michelle Casareale*
Mary Parsnik

Oboe
Emily Di Angelo
Noelle Drewes*

Clarinet
Sarah Bennett*
Wolcott Humphrey

Bassoon
Katie Barker
Andrew Beeks*

Clarinet
Sarah Bennett*
Wolcott Humphrey

Horn
Michael Bellofatto*
Rose Valby

Trumpet
Lindsey Jessick
Nikola Tomic*

Timpani
Nicholas Galante

Graduate Assistants
Benjamin Aneff
Devin Hughes

* denotes principal

Personnel listed in alphabetical order to emphasize each member's personal contribution.
ITHACA COLLEGE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Jeffrey D. Grogan, conductor

Violin I
Joshua Modney, concertmaster
Megan Atchley
Daniel Demetriou
Christian Simmelink
Jeffrey Abbott
Brenna Gillette
Elizabeth Stein
Mary Raschella
Jeannine McGreevy
Timothy Ball
Maev O'Hara
Colin Oettle
Paul Diegert

Violin II
Diane Bartholomew
Marc Bettis
Danice-Claud Desir
Natasha Colkett
Kate Goldstein
Brian Hwang
Christopher Jones*
Lindsey Leone
Sharon Mohar
Benjamin Nugent
Shawn Riley
Ian Salmon
Laura Sciavolino
Sarina Woo

Cello
Samuel Boase-Miller
Jennifer Chieffalo
Alana Chown
Peter Guarino
Laura Messina
Elizabeth Meszaros*
Emily McBride
Emily McNeill
Tim Nowak
Kelly Quinn
Matt Rotjan
Molly Sörlie

Bass
Nathan Gulla
Xander Lott
Patrick O'Connell*
Kyle Olmstead
Benjamin Reynolds
Naomi Williams
Justin Wixson

Flute
Michelle Casareale*
Melissa Wierzbowski

Piccolo
Melissa Wertheimer

P0boe
Emily Di Angelo*
Luke Conklin

English Horn
Meghan Kimball

Clarinet
Wolcott Humphrey*
Meggan Frost

Bassoon
Andrew Chapman
Ryan Potvin*

Horn
Michael Bellofatto*
Danny Carter
Brian Hoefschweiger
Lori Roy
Andrea Silvestrini

Trumpet
Joseph Brown
Kristen Meyers
Nikola Tomic*

Trombone
Phillip Machnik*
Sarah Schoen

Tuba
William Plenk

Timpani
Andrew Sickmeier

Percussion
Matthew Donello
Alan Dust*
Josh Oxford
Gregory Sutliff

Piano/Celeste
Russell Posegate

Harp
Myra Kovary+

Graduate Assistants
Benjamin Aneff
Devin Hughes

* principal
+ guest artist

Personnel listed in alphabetical order to emphasize each member’s personal contribution.