Program Notes

haunted topography

Program notes provided by the composer

Haunted Topography is a meditation on a story told to me by Moe Armstrong in the summer of 2011. Moe is the founder of the veteran rehabilitation program Vet2Vet. It was in this capacity that he met a woman whose son had been killed in Vietnam. Even decades after the loss, this mother could not even begin to move past the pain. In speaking with Moe, it came out that, though she had asked, no one had ever shown her a map of where it had happened. She felt that she needed to know this—to see the place where her son had been killed—before her healing process could begin. Moe showed her, and it helped her to begin to heal.

It is a simple story, of course, but it says a lot about the nature of grief, of mortality and of the peculiarities of each individual's needs while engaging with the healing process.

haunted topography was commissioned by Alarm Will Sound, and received its world premiere on October 21, 2011 at Roulette as part of the 2011 SONIC Festival.

Symphony No. 7, op. 92

Program notes by Kin Szeto, edited by Keehun Nam

The Seventh Symphony, which Beethoven himself called one of his best works, was composed between 1811 and 1812. This symphony was premiered on December 8th, 1813 in Vienna. Since the premiere, it has been performed frequently and has become one of his most popular symphonies. Wagner remarked that the 7th Symphony represented “the apotheosis of the dance,” which at that time was the highest commendation for a work of music. This symphony was premiered alongside the 8th symphony which is quite compact when compared with the grandness of the 7th symphony.

The first movement starts with a long introduction, revealing the harmonic route of the entire symphony. After the introduction, the Vivace (“lively,” beginning with only the flutes) is full of popular dance rhythms and surprising dynamic changes. This energy characterizes the entire work.

Beethoven wrote “Allegretto” as the tempo marking of the second movement meaning that it should be quite brisk. This is unusual as most second movements of symphonies in that era were slow. A unique character of this movement is how easily one can hear the evolution of the melody which makes its way around the orchestra throughout the movement. Without any unnecessary elements, Beethoven creates energy only the harmonic progression and the repetition of the melody.

The “Scherzo” (“joke” in Italian) is quite fast and exciting. The slow parts of the movement (marked “Trio”) repeats twice in the movement making the structure of this movement an extended ternary form (A-B-A-B-A). You can also find this approach in Beethoven’s 4th and 6th Symphonies. While this structure is quite common for that time period, Beethoven makes it better—as only Beethoven could—by making it unpredictable!

Somehow, Beethoven makes the final movement even more exciting than all of the prior movements. Near the end of the movement, Beethoven marks “fff” (meaning “loud-er-est!”). This is the first time that Beethoven used this marking. At this point, the energy of the symphony reaches a boiling point, bringing the symphony to a close.
