PROGRAM NOTES

Non, Di Voi Non Vo' Fidarmi

Non, Di vio non vo' fidarmi

No, oh never will I trust you, oh blind love. Oh cruel beauty.
You are a liar, a flatterer, a Deity.

This treble duet was composed in 1741. It was later used in Messiah as the chorus For Unto Us A Child Is Born in a four-part version.

Mountain Nights

These pieces, three of which are heard in tonight's performance, are not a cycle but five separate pieces. The first was composed in 1924, the next three in 1955-56, and a fifth in 1962. Kodály said that "mountains have voices." The composer was called "the mountain magician" by his students because they thought that he was able to find these mysterious voices in these pieces. Lászió Eösze observed that these pieces are reflective of a person who has been through much and seeks rest for the mind in nature. Bence Szaboicsi stated that they constitute "spatial artwork that opens up broad horizons."
