PROGRAM NOTES

Shadow Rituals is a rhythmic, energetic, dark and mystical dance – a reflection of something primitive or ancient. Shadow Rituals won First Prize in the Frank Ticheli Composition Contest and has quickly become a frequently performed work for wind bands. Michael Markowski is pursuing a degree in Film and Media Production from Arizona State University. He has studied music business and law, recording engineering, and currently studies music composition under Karl Schindler.

Like many of John Mackey’s works, Clocking is influenced strongly by dance and movement, though its two movements, seemingly disparate, incorporate the idea of motion in entirely different ways. The abstract concept of time moving constantly – whether slowly and with flux or insistently with purpose – is a unifying motive of the work. The opening movement, set in a dreamlike andante, begins with a solo euphonium who plays a ‘longing semitone’ ascent that seems to repeatedly ask a question. Eventually, this semi-tone motive gives way to a chaconne that is the backdrop for a despairing melody heard in several different wind colors.

The second movement begins where the first ends – in harmonic ambiguity. The melody, which first appears in solo bassoon, answers the question of harmonic geography by firmly planting itself in a brooding minor key. Elements are added against the ostinato and at each cadence, the ensemble flares dynamically with visceral ferocity, becoming more insistent and violent with the conclusion of each phrase. This process is broken only twice, with the sonic environment resetting itself to a gentle pianissimo as the saxophones reinitiate the simple ostinato chord. After the third such major climactic moment, a brief coda closes the work by recalling the four-step descent that drove the first movement and alluding, perhaps subconsciously, to John Adams’ Lollapalooza with a frenzy of agitated syncopations and a tremendous terminal thwack of percussion and low woodwinds.

Notes by Jake Wallace

“Don’t You See?” is in memory of and dedicated to Stephen J. Paul, who enriched the professional and personal lives of teachers, students, family and friends in his passionate efforts to elevate the teaching profession. Professor Paul died unexpectedly at the age of 48 – in the prime of his career.

Grantham says, “I had long considered the possibility of a piece based on African American spirituals, and their wide-ranging emotional and expressive qualities seemed ideal for this particular occasion. In “Don’t You See?”, three highly contrasting yet complementary spirituals are employed. The first half of the piece is based on “Death Ain’t Nothin’ but a Robber”, a lament that cuts to the heart of the experience of loss. The text reads in part: “Death ain’t nothin’ but a robber, don’t you see?” The second half of the piece becomes more hopeful and affirmative with the appearance of “I’ve just Come from the Fountain”, and “Blow the Trumpet, Gabriel”. These two spirituals interact with increasing exuberance until the climax, when six virtuosic trumpet parts resolve into a fragment of the opening spiritual.

Suite Francaise is an original band work by the 20th century composer Darius Milhaud who wrote it during World War II (1944) while a resident of the United States. Milhaud writes: ‘For a long time I have had the idea of writing a composition fit for high school purposes and this was the result. In the bands, orchestras and choirs of American high schools, colleges and universities where the youth of the nation be found, it is obvious that they need music of their time, not too difficult to perform, but nevertheless keeping the characteristic idiom of the composer.”

The five parts of this Suite are named after French Provinces, the very ones in which the American and Allied armies fought together with the French underground for the liberation of my country: Normandy, Brittany, Ile-de-France (of which Paris is the center), Alsace-Lorraine, and Provence (Milhaud’s birthplace).

“I used some folk tunes of these Provinces. I wanted the young American to hear the popular melodies of those parts of France where their fathers and brothers fought [on behalf of the] peaceful and democratic people of France.”

Notes from Garofalo and Milhaud

Upon meeting Nikolai Rimsky-Korsakov in 1868, Tchaikovsky renewed his keen sense of musical nationalism. Inspired by the master composer, Tchaikovsky’s compositional style would forever capture the color and zest of Russian folk dance and music. The flurry, energetic drive and playful melodies associated with his ballet score are all here in this rare and invigorating music. This edition comes from an arrangement from the ballet, “The Snow Maidens”, that was originally transcribed for military band.
