Fantasies
on poems of Richard Dehmel
(Free translation by James Breed)

1. Voice of Evening

The field lies still
Boughs and grasses leaning gently
In the rising mist.

All that can be heard, listening intently,
Are Nature's rustlings; but now
You move, and with your shoes
Disturb her silence.

2. Forest Rapture

Now begins the forest's rustling,
Trees caress, anticipating night;
As if listening, happy with their sounds,
Gently touching, hand in hand, in failing light.

Here, beneath their outstretched branches,
I am quite alone,
Lost in wonder, awe;
My soul entirely thine.

3. Love

My soul within this world lives but through you;
So, also, does your soul through me.
Now the rivers' banks are down,
Our torrents are conjoined:
A calmly flowing world
Of you in me and me in you.

4. Beetle Ditty

Beetle, Oh Beetle, still buzz!
Stay and become one of us.
Your feelers are wide,
Two small fans outside;
Rush along here and there,
Count up to who knows where.

Count with me to twenty-seven,
Many minutes still to heaven.
Now you've found my treasure box!
Back again, to pick the locks?
Beetle, my Beetle, still run;
Don't, though, forget to have fun!
