Diego Vega: Música Muisca

From the composer:

Música Muisca for chamber orchestra has a strong connection to the city where I was born, Bogotá, and takes its name from the Muisca culture. Before the arrival of the Spaniards around 1537, the Muisca people inhabited a region on the Eastern Cordillera of the Colombian Andes, the current provinces of Cundinamarca and Boyacá. According to chronicles from the XVII century, this is also the region where "The Legend of El Dorado" originally took place.

Música Muisca tries to evoke the stunning but also cold and foggy mountainous landscapes from this region.

Ludwig van Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor for Piano and Orchestra, Op. 37

Beethoven started the sketches for this concerto around 1796, but the main work was done in 1800. He played the solo part on the first performance in the Theater an der Wien, Vienna, on April 5, 1803. The program on this concert included his Symphony No. 1, Symphony No. 2, and the oratorio Christ on the Mount of Olives. This concerto was later dedicated to Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia who attended the performance of Beethoven’s Eroica Symphony at Prince Franz Joseph von Lobkowitz’s Palais.

The solo part of this concerto was not entirely completed before the performance date. As the conductor of Theater an der Wien, Ignaz von Seyfried, who turned the pages for Beethoven, recounted:

*At the performance of his Third Concerto, he asked me to turn the pages for him; but—heaven help me! –That was easier said than done. I saw almost nothing but empty sheets. At the most on one page or the other a few wholly unintelligible signs that could as well have been Egyptian hieroglyphics, scribbled down to serve as clues for him. He played nearly all of the solo part from memory, not having had time to put it all on paper. He gave me a secret glance whenever he was the end of one of the invisible passages, and my scarcely concealed anxiety not to miss the decisive moment amused him greatly, and he laughed heartily at the jovial supper which we ate afterwards.

The first performance of this concerto did not get much attention. The Zeitung für die elegante Welt of Leipzig mentioned after two symphonies, “Less successful was the following concerto in C minor, that Hr. v. Beethoven, otherwise known as an excellent pianist, performed not completely to the public’s satisfaction.”
The Concerto was forgotten after the premiere until the second performance the next year at the Augarten in Vienna late in July. Ferdinand Ries, who wrote out the cadenza with the composer’s approval, played the solo part with Beethoven conducting. The score was published in 1804.

Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart: Symphony No. 41 in C major, K. 551, Jupiter

The nickname “Jupiter” was not given by the composer. As Michael Steinberg states in his book The Symphony: “It is not Mozart’s, but it is old and perhaps the brainchild of Johann Peter Salomon, the German–born violinist and impresario most famous for having twice enticed Haydn to London. At any rate, in 1829, thirty–eight years after Mozart’s death and fourteen after Salomon’s, the English composer, organist, and publisher Vincent Novello and his wife Mary visited the Continent and spent a few summer days in Salzburg with Mozart’s widow and son. The Novellos kept separate journals, and in Vincent’s, on 7 August 1829, we may read the following: Mozart’s son said he considered the Finale to his father’s Sinfonia in C– which Salomon christened the Jupiter–to be the highest triumph of Instrumental Composition, and I agree with him.”

Mozart completed this symphony on August 10, 1788 in Vienna. After the death of Christoph Gluck in 1778, Mozart took over the vacancy of Court Composer to the Emperor Joseph II with eight hundred florins salary a year. At this point in Mozart’s life, he was poorer than usual; these eight hundred florins allowed him and his wife Constanze to live in better conditions. Starting in June 1788, Mozart composed his last three symphonies, his most mature work in this genre in less than two months. As Mozart wrote on June 27, 1788: “I have done more work in the ten days I have lived here than in two months in my other lodgings. I should be far better here were it not for the gloomy thoughts that often come to me. I must drive them away resolutely, for I am living comfortably, pleasantly and cheaply.”

Just a few months before he completed Jupiter Symphony, Mozart was preparing his first Viennese performance of Don Giovanni, and he borrowed the tune from his arietta “Un bacio di mano” K. 541 as the second theme of the first movement. In the finale of this symphony, Mozart shows his knowledge of Baroque music by writing a five–part fugue in the coda. Steinberg says further “Mozart unfurls a dazzling glory of polyphony to cap, in one of music’s truly sublime pages, a movement that is one of the most splendid manifestations of that rich gathering–in we call the classical style.”
